

All aboard for a touch of romance

PERFECT FOR A WATERY RENDEZVOUS

IT HASN'T been the best summer for alfresco dining, never mind alfresco dining on a narrowboat. But one thing's for sure, spending a day aboard a boat on The Regent's Canal has got to be better than yet another date at the local pub.

The regular trip takes eight hours from start to finish and you can tailor it to your specifications.

At £140 each it's not cheap, but you do get the whole boat to yourself, as well as breakfast, a three-course lunch, cream tea and all drinks. With all those distractions, you'd better make sure you look up long enough to see London drift by.

The day starts at 10am. You set off from just below the City Basin and sail through King's Cross and Camden Lock, until you are in the more picturesque environs of The Regent's Park. Somewhere west of Kensal Green, you'll pull up for lunch.

You'll be hosted by Jenny – a cordon bleu chef – and be served with treats, such as, a starter of chicken livers, followed by steak Provençale and strawberries and cream.

After lunch, you'll get to see London from the other side on the return trip.
